

RetirementLifeToday.com Announces ECHO History Project for Education

LAKE ST. LOUIS, MO, July 18, 2006 / - - RetirementLifeToday.com LLC announced today that it is sponsoring the Educating Children on Historical Observances (ECHO) Project, which will offer anyone the opportunity to share their experiences surrounding historical events that changed the history of the United States.

The ECHO Project will allow older generations to pass on their experiences and perspectives to future generations,” said Ms. Lantz. “Narratives of historical events may be told in the framework of everyday life and American society at that time. This will allow future generations to better understand these historical events.”

“For example, the ECHO Project will allow those living when Pearl Harbor was attacked to share their experiences that day, such as what they doing, where they were, and what impact it had on them.”

Upon completion, the ECHO Project will be made available to educators online free of charge.

Anyone is free to contribute to the ECHO Project by going to www.RetirementLifeToday.com.

About RetirementLifeToday.com

Since its launch late last year, RetirementLifeToday.com has become one of the highest ranking websites for retirees, seniors, and the “baby boomer” generation according to top industry rankings.

RetirementLifeToday.com is a premier provider of retirement news, retirement lifestyle, health, recreation, and financial information for retirees, seniors, the “baby boomer” generation, and those interested in learning more about retirement-related information. RetirementLifeToday.com also provides special sections on grandparenting, RVing, and retirement communities, and Best Places to Retire. Membership is free and is open to anyone interested; being retired is not a requirement. RetirementLifeToday.com is not a part of or affiliated with any political or other organization, and is not engaged in lobbying efforts of any kind.

For further details concerning RetirementLifeToday.com, please contact:

Corporate & Media
RetirementLifeToday.com LLC
1-800-881-2050 ext. 502